CDP 2021 Disclosure Workshop Series

It is that time of year again – the CDP 2021 Disclosure Workshop Series starts this month. CDP's series of workshops, held annually, were moved online in 2020 for the first time due to COVID-19. The workshops are run to support CDP's stakeholders with the disclosure process and environmental action.

The 2021 Workshop Series will take place throughout May and June. Ranging from multi-stakeholder thought-leadership panels to capacity-building sessions led by CDP's technical experts, the workshops will engage thousands of stakeholders who understand the power and scale of collaboration needed to solve urgent environmental issues.

The National Business Initiative (NBI) encourages its members to attend these critical workshops, especially if you are a first-time respondent. However, even seasoned CDP contributors will benefit from updates on CDP processes, questionnaires and scoring.

These workshops are open to everyone to attend and participants can register on the CDP website. An overview of the agenda and workshop dates is also provided on the CDP website.

Background on CDP annual workshops

These valuable events welcome participants and speakers from the companies, cities, states and regions, investors, policymakers and partners with whom CDP works. As such, the workshops are an important touchpoint for all stakeholders in the annual CDP disclosure cycle. While they vary according to regional needs, typically the workshops cover updates to the CDP questionnaires and scoring methodologies, updates on CDP's strategic direction, peer-to-peer learning and thought leadership on environmental stewardship more broadly. They also provide a valuable networking and relationship-building opportunity for participants.
